Julietta recently released her single "La Línea" featuring the rising stars Yahritza y Su Esencia. "La Línea" is the third song to preview Julieta's upcoming album 'Norteña' which will be released in May.

"La Línea" addresses one of the most complex realities of our time: the separation of families and couples due to migration and deportation. Through a narrative approach, the track portrays how a border – an invisible line on the map – can completely transform people's lives, leaving stories suspended, long-distance love and uncertain futures. Inspired by close experiences, Julieta reflects on the changing perception surrounding migration.

"'La Línea' is about two people who have been separated by a deportation," Julieta explains. "A line that seems not to exist changes everything in the lives of many families, couples, loves – stories that are paused and often cut short for not having been born in the country where they try to build their lives. I grew up in Tijuana and have seen how those stories have been changing. Before, when someone was deported, they were seen as if they were a criminal, with the idea that they could only have been deported for having done something illegal. But now people can be considered illegal simply for having arrived from another country."

About the collaboration, Julieta shares, "I'm happy to sing with Yahritza y Su Esencia, a group I've been following for a long time. I believe Yahritza's voice perfectly expresses the pain of separation and the emotion of wanting to see someone again, and to say, 'Until the day I return to you, I will keep singing.' It is a song of love, of hope, of wanting to be with a loved one again despite the obstacles."

Musically, "La Línea" fits within the sonic universe of "Norteña," Julieta's new album, where she explores her roots on the border in Tijuana. With this release, Julieta reaffirms her ability to transform personal stories into universal anthems, while continuing to build a bridge between different cultures, sounds, and generations within Latin music.

"La Línea" follows Julieta's recent single "Tengo Que Contarte" featuring Natalia Lafourcade. "Tengo Que Contarte" is a conversation turned into a song. The track moves between nostalgia and confession, exploring that intimate moment when telling the truth becomes inevitable. "Two friends get together to talk about life," Julieta reflects. "About how it isn't always easy, how it sometimes confuses us and leaves us defenseless in the face of change. But a friend is encouragement – someone who listens to us and can understand what we've lived through. I'm happy to have collaborated with my beloved Natalia Lafourcade, whom I've known for a long time, whom I admire and whom I feel is the ideal voice to sing this song together – a song of friendship, connection and affection. I wanted to convey a cantina-like spirit, of being in a place talking about the truths of life. This is about how, sometimes in life, the people who support us are the most important ones for moving forward."

Julietta recently received the "Icon Award" at the TikTok Awards Latin America ceremony held in Mexico City. With 19 million Spotify Monthly Listeners, Julieta remains one of the most impactful Mexican female artists in the world. Julieta is the only Mexican woman to surpass 1 billion streams on Spotify as she recently did with the song "Lo Siento BB :/" in collaboration with Tainy and Bad Bunny. In December, Bad Bunny invited Julieta to perform a mini set at his Mexico City stadium show – a statement for how her classic songs have transcended to a new generation.
