Ellie “Belly” Dempster and Zoe “Black Swan” Dubois will compete in the first women’s flyweight championship match in Power Slap history at 125 pounds, marking a milestone for the organization and the growth of women’s competition. Dempster, 29, resides in Las Vegas and is originally from Canada. With a 2-0,1 KO record, Dempster was named Power Slap’s 2025 Rookie of the Year after her debut and has quickly become one of the organization’s fastest-rising personalities. Her opponent, Zoe “Black Swan” Dubois, is a Las Vegas-based flyweight with a 2-1 Power Slap record, recognized for her aggressive style and professional wrestling background. Dubois recently secured a unanimous decision victory over Chelsea Dodson at Power Slap 19 on April 17, 2026, solidifying her status as a top contender entering this historic championship match.

Middleweight champion Isaih Quinones (5-3,4 KOs) of Lancaster, California, defending his title against undefeated challenger Stunt Marshall (3-0,3 KOs) of Atlanta, Georgia. This matchup brings together one of the division’s top finishers and a rapidly rising contender who has defeated all three of his opponents by knockout. Quinones, recognized for his slap power, enters the match with four knockouts, after recently regaining the middleweight title in a trilogy match against former champion Branden Bordeaux. Marshall, an independent pro wrestler and undefeated professional slap fighter, has quickly established himself as a leading contender in the division.

Cole “Full Send” Young (4-2-1, 2 KOs) of Canaseraga, New York, will face Brandon “The Ripper” Rhodes (5-3,1 KO) of Denver, Colorado, for the welterweight championship in a matchup between two of the division’s most battle-tested competitors. Young enters the bout fresh off a career-defining performance at Power Slap 17, where he captured the world middleweight championship. Known for his composure, precision, and endurance under pressure, Young has established himself as one of Power Slap’s rising stars. His opponent, Rhodes, is one of the division’s most experienced and dangerous strikers. “The Ripper” has built a reputation for resilience and knockout power throughout his Power Slap career, earning notable victories over Azael Rodriguez at Power Slap 18 via second-round TKO, Trenten Bordeaux at Power Slap 15 via second-round knockout, and Emanuel Muniz at Power Slap 14 by unanimous decision. Rhodes most recently showcased his veteran poise against Bordeaux, proving experience remains a major factor on the Power Slap stage. With both athletes carrying momentum into the matchup, the welterweight title fight is expected to be one of the most competitive and explosive matches of the night.

“International Fight Week is the biggest stage in combat sports, and Power Slap 21 is bringing three major title fights to Las Vegas, the fight capital of the world,” said Frank Lamicella, CEO of Thrill Sports. “From established champions to rising contenders and historic firsts for the women’s division, this event demonstrates the continued growth and momentum of Power Slap worldwide.”

Power Slap has quickly become a prominent combat sports property, combining knockout power, viral moments, and live-event excitement. Power Slap 21 on July 10 lands during International Fight Week, the UFC’s annual week-long of celebratory MMA events. Fans worldwide can expect to see premier slap fighting matches starting at 9 pm ET / 6 pm, PT live on YouTube.

Additional fights for Power Slap 21 will be announced in the coming weeks via Power Slap’s social media channels. Tickets for Power Slap 21 at The Chelsea at The Cosmopolitan of Las Vegas are now available at Ticketmaster.com.
